SCENERY CHANGE HELPED THIS PAIR

Ed Koney and Walter Holke
Benefited by Shift From One Club to Another.

Change of scenery did a world of good to two National league players during the 1934 season. The duo are Ed Koney of the Brooklyn Dodgers and Walter Holke of the Boston Braves. These two first sackers displayed the best form that they have shown in some years. Their offensive ability showed a decided improvement.

Koney led the league first basemen in hitting and Holke was close behind him. Koney is credited with a .277 batting average in the unofficial statistics. This is the best National league average he has had since 1912, when he batted .314 with the St. Louis Cardinals. Since that year he has not risen above the .276 mark. If his Federal league record is accepted.

It will be remembered that Koney was sent by the Cardinals to the Pittsburgh Pirates in 1912. Other players in the swap were Harmon, Mowrey, Butler, Robinson, Wilson, Dolan and Miller. Koney only played the season of 1914 with Dreyfuss' team and then jumped, 1915 finding him with the Pittsburgh Pirates. After the Federal league was sold to Boston for $4,000. He did not set the world free with his hitting, and in the 1918 season went as low as .236 in the 119 games he played in. Last spring he was a holdout.

The series of accidents and one or two other happenings during the spring training trip made it necessary for the Brooklyn club to go on a hunt for fielders and the purchase of Koney was the result. He stepped into the game without any spring workouts, and for quite a spell during the early months of the campaign was the offensive star of the Brooklyn club.

Koney has been in the National league 13 years, and every season since 1908 he has played in more than 100 games. He has been rated one of the best fielding first basemen in the game. Previous to the 1918 season he has led the first basemen in fielding five times. In 1911 he had a fielding average of .991, and in 1913 and 1914 his mark was .985. In 1917 it was .991, and in 1918 .992.

Koney has also broken into the record books for accepting the greatest number of chances, assists and put-outs in a season. Five times, three of them in a row, has Koney accepted the greatest number of chances in a season. In 1909, 1910 and 1911 he did this, taking 1,584, 1,499 and 1,652 chances, respectively.

Koney's record also shows that he had the greatest number of assists for first basemen five years. Fred Tenney, the old Boston star and then Giant, holds the record. The left-hander made 157 assists in 1905. Koney comes next with 122, made in 1908.

If John McGraw had retained Holke and Walter had displayed the offensive ability that he showed for the Braves last season, there might have been a different ending to the National league pennant race.

McGraw sidetracked Holke for Chase, and Hal did not come up to the expectations of the Giant leader.

True, there was not so great a margin between the respective batting averages of the rival first basemen, but there were periods when Chase was way below good form. His inability to hit in the early months of the campaign was a serious detriment to the chances of the Giants.

Holke batted 40 points better than he did the previous year, and stole more bases than he did in his two previous seasons in the league. The official records also will show that he led his team in the item of runs batted in.

CHANGE RACE DATE.

DETROIT, Dec. 4.—A change in the date of the 1935 gold cup races of the American Powerboat association, probably will be necessary because of the fixing of the week beginning Aug. 10 for the running of the Harnsworth trophy races in England, it was stated by members of the association here today.

Three American boats are expected to contest in the Harnsworth races, and as all of them will be entered in the gold cup races, which had been set for the first week in September, it has been virtually decided to seek an earlier date for the American classic. Three days to include July 4, have been tentatively decided upon.
